

But, the home buying and selling process mechanics of a transaction has changed dramatically. No open houses, no showings and no listings in person, wow! To keep up with these changes, top producing real estate agents like Shaun Alston have adapted to this current crisis by innovating new ways to work with their clients remotely. Most firms including Eagle Realty have gone virtual and are now meeting clients via Skype, FaceTime and Zoom meetings. You can even review and sign real estate transaction documents without even having to meet in person. It's the jet set life style. It is actually nothing new. It is how the rich and famous have bought and sold. International buyers don't take a red eye to tour a property that they saw on-line in the fifth largest market in the world. They purchase remotely, relying on the virtual experience. DocuSign for real estate is an easy-to-use transaction management platform that transforms every step of a complex real estate transaction into a simple digital process. This makes strategizing about your home purchase or selling experience easier than it's ever been.
